You have to decide how to approach the case, and form your arguments for the grand jury. In order to do so, you must answer the following questions: Does the abuse of a suspect in a police station be considered an occupational crime or a visible crime? Occupational crimes can be committed “through the exercise of government authority.” Does this mean we blame the government or the individual for such an offense?

ANSWER: Answers will vary.

122. You are a research scholar who is preparing a brief for the Supreme Court on the impact of Roe v. Wade. You must address the tendency of some researchers believe that the crime rate declined in the 1990s because of the Supreme Court decision on abortion, and whether you agree with this theory. Because this is such a polarizing issue, your application of statistics and evidence to your opinions is crucial.

ANSWER: Answers will vary.

123. You are a governor who is setting up a meeting of legal professionals to get recommendations for law reform. Some of the people you have invited argue that offenses that are mala prohibita should be illegal because they lead to crimes considered to be mala in se. What kinds of arguments are they likely to make. Which type of crime should we be more worried about in your mind?

ANSWER: Answers will vary.

124. You are an employee of the Department of Homeland Security and are tasked with the classification of crimes. The decisions you make determine jurisdictions to a certain extent, and will likely have an impact on society at large. Should the acts of violence such as the ones committed in Oklahoma City and on 9/11 be considered organized crime or terrorism? Why does it matter how you define these acts?

ANSWER: Answers will vary.

125. You are in charge of the budget allocation for the state of Mississippi's criminal justice system, and need to make decisions every day that affect citizens and offenders alike. How does the use and allocation of tax dollars influence the approaches to crime and crime rates within the criminal justice system of your state?

ANSWER: Answers will vary, but students should reflect an understanding of budgetary priorities within a democracy where opposing conservative and liberal views impact priorities within the criminal justice system.
