- a. On the year-end balance sheet, Playground Equipment Corporation reported its inventory at market value, which was greater than cost. As a result of this procedure, a gain was recognized on the company's income statement.
- b. Mrs. Devlin, the president of the company, purchased an automobile for her son using the company's money. The company's accountant recorded the expenditure as salaries expense.
- c. Playground Equipment Corporation reported income from operations of $5,000,000 for the current year. During the year, Devlin settled and paid a $5,000,000 class action lawsuit against the company resulting from damages incurred from the sale of defective products. The settlement was reported as a miscellaneous expense with no footnotes provided.
- d. Playground Equipment is going to issue additional common stock next year. In order to improve its income, the company switched from the LIFO inventory cost flow method to FIFO. The company did not disclose the accounting change. Comparative financial statements were prepared.
- e. The company made $3,000,000 of expenditures to expand a building that originally cost $5,000,000. The expenditures are expected to benefit operations over the building's remaining useful life of ten years. The expenditures were expensed as maintenance.

71. Explain the difference between comparability and consistency.

ANSWER: Comparability of accounting information enables users to identify similarities and differences between two or more sets of economic facts. Comparability is a quality of the relationship between items of accounting information. Although related to comparability, consistency means that accounting methods and procedures are applied in the same manner from period to period. Consistency is a quality of the accounting process rather than a quality of the account and amounts themselves. Consistency helps to achieve the goal of comparability across periods, but only if the underlying phenomena being reported remains the same.

78. Describe the basic nature of the three expense recognition methods. Provide two examples of each.

ANSWER: Cause and effect recognition occurs when some expenses are caused directly in the course of generating revenues. Cause and effect recognition, which is often termed the matching principle, matches the expense to the period in which the economic benefits are consumed by generating revenues. Examples of expenses that are recognized by associating cause and effect are sales commissions and cost of goods sold.

Systematic and rational allocation means that in the absence of a direct means of associating cause and effect, its cost should be allocated to the periods benefited by the expense in a systematic and rational manner. Examples of expenses that are recognized in a systematic and rational manner are depreciation of property and equipment and amortization of intangible assets.

Some costs are immediately expensed because the costs have no discernible future benefits or the allocation among several accounting periods is not considered to serve any useful purpose. Examples include managers' salaries and travel expenses.

Chapter 2: Financial Reporting: Its Conceptual Framework

81. At lunch recently, two accountants were discussing the merits of the FASB's conceptual framework project, which resulted in the publication of seven Statements of Financial Accounting Concepts and required more than ten years of effort. One accountant thought the effort was a waste of resources, since accounting was unlike physics, chemistry, and biology, where natural laws apply. The other accountant thought the effort was very valuable. He stated that "accounting, like any other discipline, benefits from having a coherent theory."

Required:

Write a brief essay that discusses the advantages that are derived from the existence of a conceptual framework for financial accounting and reporting.

ANSWER: The FASB's conceptual framework should result in the following advantages. It should "(1) guide the FASB in establishing accounting standards, (2) provide a framework for resolving accounting questions in situations where a standard doesn't currently exist, (3) determine the bounds for judgment in the preparation of financial statements, (4) increase users' understanding of and confidence in financial reporting, and (5) enhance comparability."

Chapter 2: Financial Reporting: Its Conceptual Framework

83. GAAP lists and describes the qualitative characteristics that make accounting information useful for decision-making purposes. The FASB viewed the characteristics as a hierarchy of qualities that make accounting information useful. The FASB stated that accounting information must possess both relevance and faithful representation qualities to be useful, but it was noted that relevance and faithful representation may conflict with each other in some instances. For example, to increase relevance, faithful representation may have to be sacrificed, or vice versa.

Required:

- a. Define "relevance" and "faithful representation" and list the components or "ingredients" of each quality.
- b. Give an example in financial accounting that illustrates the following tradeoffs:
 - (1) Relevance is sacrificed in order to make accounting information more reliable.
 - (2) Faithful representation is sacrificed in order to make accounting information more relevant.

ANSWER:

- a. Relevance is defined as information that is capable of making a difference in the decision-making process. Relevant information helps users predict the outcomes of past, present, and future events or confirms or corrects prior expectations and is of the nature and magnitude that would influence judgment of a reasonable person relying on the information. The ingredients of relevance are (1) predictive value, (2) confirmatory value, and (3) materiality.

To be a faithful representation, information must be (1) complete, (2) neutral and (3) free from error.

- b.
 - (1) The use of historical cost in financial accounting is an example of a sacrifice of relevance for reliability. Historical cost is reliable information, but it may not be as relevant as current cost information.
 - (2) When a private company provides its own estimate of the fair value of its' stock. The value is relevant, but might not be a faithful representation of the stock's actual value.

Chapter 2: Financial Reporting: Its Conceptual Framework

84. The Conceptual Framework includes two "fundamental qualitative characteristics" that must be present for financial reporting information to be useful.

Required:

List and describe the two fundamental characteristics of usefulness.

- ANSWER:*
1. Information must have the quality of relevance. Relevant information must be capable of making a difference in the decisions made by external users in their capacity as capital providers. To be relevant, information must have predictive value, confirmatory value, or both.
 2. Information must have the quality of faithful representation. Faithful representation of economic phenomena occurs when the related information is complete, neutral, and free from material error.

85. Discuss the financial reporting model in the FASB Conceptual Framework.

ANSWER: FASB financial reporting model requires the five basic financial statements as listed below.

- balance sheet
- income statement
- comprehensive income statement
- statement of cash flows
- statement of shareholder's equity

Under GAAP the financial statements should contain notes to explain the different methodologies used to calculate estimates and policies. The statements should also contain supplementary items necessary to make an informed decision about the health and wellbeing of the company. The model also suggests areas in which investors, creditors, and lenders can find additional company information.

Chapter 2: Financial Reporting: Its Conceptual Framework

86. Your CEO has told you that she has little use for accounting figures based on historical costs. She believes that fair values are of far more significance to the board of directors than "out-of-date costs."

Required:

Present some arguments to convince her that accounting data should still be based on historical costs.

ANSWER:

Arguments supporting the use of historical cost include:

- Cost is definite and reliable; other values would have to be determined somewhat arbitrarily and there would be disagreement as to the amounts to be used.
- Amounts determined by other methods would have to be revised frequently.
- comparison with other companies is facilitated if cost is employed.
- The costs of obtaining fair values may outweigh the benefits derived.
