Lecture Suggestions

1. What are the different types of law enforcement in the United States?

Local law enforcement accounts for the majority of the law enforcement in the United States. States as well as the federal government also have policing powers and duties. Local policing employs 76.5 percent of the nation's police officers, while 14 percent work for the federal government and 9.5 percent at the state level. Nationwide, in 2008, there were 251 full-time state and local law enforcement employees for every 100,000 residents, for a nationwide sworn law enforcement employee average of 2.51 law enforcement employees per 1,000 citizens.

2. Introduce several federal law enforcement agencies.

Four major U.S. cabinet departments administer most federal law enforcement agencies and personnel: the Department of Justice, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Homeland Security, and the Department of the Interior. The U.S. Department of Justice is the primary legal and prosecutorial arm of the U.S. government. Included in this department are the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), the U.S. Marshals, and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF). Within the Department of the Treasury are the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), the Executive Office for Asset Forfeiture (EOAF), the Executive Office for Terrorist Financing and Financial Crime (EOTF/FC), the Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC), and the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN). The Department of Homeland Security merged 22 previously disparate domestic agencies into one department to protect the nation against threats to the homeland.

3. What are some notable changes made in U.S. law enforcement following the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks against the United States?

The federal government, in particular, responded to 9/11 by creating the huge cabinet-level Department of Homeland Security, which merged and improved the many disparate federal agencies concerned with terrorism, homeland defense, and response to catastrophic emergencies. Local, state, and private agencies also reengineered themselves to address the need for homeland defense.

4. What are some of consequences of Operation Fast and Furious?

Operation Fast and Furious was first conceived in Washington, D.C., in October 2009 as a result of the frustration of seeing guns bought in the United States “walking” across the border to Mexico. By November 2009, a new strategy was proposed and put in place: Let the guns be purchased, and follow them to their eventual end. The guns would flow through the weapons trafficking network and lead to the upper echelons of the network. The hope was that the operation would take down the drug cartels.

Under the rules in force at ATF at the time, the program was allowed. It had the legal approval of the U.S. Attorney in Phoenix, and it was funded through the Department of Justice

Agents were concerned about the tremendous adverse risks this operation carried, even though allowing guns to be purchased intentionally and watching “straw buyers” move them on a route to Mexico carried rewards as well. They hated seeing guns move through the process and into the hands of the Sinaloa drug cartel. No one in the law enforcement community wants to see weapons of such destructive power loose in criminal hands. Also, every time agents who were watching the purchases move called their supervisors and asked permission to make an arrest, they were told no.

The decision was made not to tell the government of Mexico or the U.S. Embassy officials in Mexico, even though the stated reason for the program was to follow the weapons and eventually take down the traffickers who were in Mexico. When the U.S. Embassy cabled Washington to complain about the large numbers of guns coming across the border, they were told, in effect, thank you very much; we have an ongoing investigation.

In January 2011, U.S. Attorney Burke announced a 53-count indictment involving 20 suspects. The indictment alleged that hundreds of weapons were bought and exported illegally to Mexico. During the operation more than 2,020 guns were bought by “straw purchasers.” Of those guns, 227 were recovered in Mexico; 363 were recovered in the United States, including the ones that killed U.S. Border Patrol Agent Brian Terry, who was gunned down during a firefight on the border with five illegal immigrants.

While this indictment was being announced, the U.S. House of Representatives was conducting investigations into the operation. Thousands of documents were subpoenaed, and testimony was taken from dozens of witnesses, including U.S. Attorney General Holder. The U.S. Senate voted on an amendment to prevent the Justice Department from conducting any future gun-tracking operations.

Classroom Discussion Questions

1. Law enforcement is primarily the responsibility of local governments (76.5 percent of the nation's police employees work at the local level). Why do we not have or want a national police force?
2. Most police agencies are very small. Only 5 percent of departments employ 100 or more full-time officers. According to the text, turnover, attrition, and officer separation from duty are significant in local policing. What contributes to this?
3. Special jurisdiction police operate in many parts of the country. What are these special police departments, and what exactly do they do?
4. The role of the sheriff has evolved in several stages since the early English sheriff (shire-reeve). What are the responsibilities of the sheriff today?
5. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has more than 12,560 special agents and is the primary agency charged with the enforcement of all federal laws not falling under the purview of other federal agencies. What are the various services that the FBI provides?
6. The U.S. Secret Service reports to the Secretary of Treasury. What are some of the functions of the Secret Service?

Student Activities

1. Using the Internet, research two state policing agencies. Compare and contrast the minimum qualifications for service. Detail the steps in the hiring process.
2. Research federal law enforcement positions. Which agency is most attractive to you and why?
3. Research the current budget of your local law enforcement agency/agencies. What have been the results of reduced budgets for your community? What solutions have been suggested at the local level to help alleviate the reduced budgets and still provide a level of service expected by the community?
