69. Identify and explain the various stages leading up to a multicultural organization.

(p. 38-39)

1. Exclusionary organization - This type of organization is the furthest from a multicultural organization. It is devoted to maintaining the dominance of one group over all others on factors such as age, education, gender, or race. This organization is characterized by exclusionary hiring practices and other forms of discrimination. Even though such organizations are directly violating laws, they unfortunately still exist.
2. Club organization - This organization is characterized by the maintenance of privileges by those who traditionally have held power. These organizations may technically get around the laws by hiring and promoting women and minorities, but only those who are deemed to have the "right" credentials and perspectives.
3. Compliance organization - This type of organization is committed to removing some of the discriminatory practices that are inherent in the exclusionary and club organizations. For example, women and minorities are hired and promoted to give the impression of openness and fair play. However, the strategy is more of meeting the letter of the laws, not the spirit.
4. Redefining organization - This advanced stage organization is characterized by an examination of all activities for the purpose of evaluating their impact on all employees' opportunity to both participate in and contribute to their own and the firm's growth and success. Redefining the organization goes beyond being just proactively antiracist and antisexist. This approach questions the core cultural values of the organization as manifested in the mission, structure, technology, psychosocial dynamics, and products and services. The redefining organization not only deals with but recognizes the value of a diverse workforce; it engages in visionary planning and problem solving to tap the strength of the diversity. This approach involves both developing and implementing policies and practices that distribute power among all diverse groups in the organization.
5. Multicultural organization - The true multicultural organization is characterized by core cultural values and an ongoing commitment to eliminate social oppression and promote dignity and respect for everyone throughout the organization. All members of diverse cultural and social groups are involved in the decisions that shape the mission, structure, technology, psychosocial dynamics, and products and services of the organization.

70. Define empathy. How is it important in managing diversity?

(p. 40)

Empathy is the ability to put oneself in another's place and see things from that person's point of view. Empathy is particularly important in managing diversity because members of diverse groups often feel that only they can truly understand the challenges or problems they are facing. It is also an important way to deal with more subtle problems because it helps the manager understand the diverse employee's point of view.

71. Identify the various techniques used by organizations to managing diversity.

(p. 41)

Organizational approaches to managing diversity include a variety of techniques. These include testing, training, mentoring, and various work/family programs.

Luthans - Chapter 02 #71

72. What are the problems facing organizations while using "testing" as an approach to managing diversity? What can they be minimized?
(p. 41)

A problem that organizations have encountered with the use of tests for selection and evaluation is that they may be culturally biased because most tests traditionally used in selection and evaluation are not suited or valid for a diverse workforce. Besides being culturally unbiased, tests used in effectively managing diversity should be able to identify whether the applicant has the necessary skills for doing the job.

One way to make tests more valid for diverse employees is to use job-specific tests rather than general aptitude or knowledge tests. People from different cultures often perform poorly on the traditional tests because they are culturally biased toward individuals who had been raised in a white, middle-class neighborhood. Older applicants may also do poorly on such culturally biased tests. Job-specific tests help prevent diversity bias by focusing on the work to be done. If pencil-and-paper or online tests are used, then to help ensure that they are not biased, scientific norming could be used. This is a process that ensures the tests are equivalent across cultures. As a result, all test questions have the same meaning regardless of the person's cultural background.

73. Identify and explain the major problem facing organizations while using training as an approach to managing diversity.
(p. 43)

A major problem of diversity training is the transfer problem. Those going through the diversity training may see the value and gain some relevant knowledge, but then do not transfer this training back to the job. A major reason for this transfer problem is a lack of confidence or self-efficacy.

74. Who is a mentor? What is the purpose of a mentor program?

(p. 43)

A mentor is a trusted counselor, coach, or advisor who provides advice and assistance. The purpose of the mentor program is to help support members of a diverse group in their jobs, socialize them in the cultural values of the organization, and pragmatically help their chances for development and advancement.

75. Identify the major problem facing organizations while using mentoring as a technique to managing diversity.
(p. 43)

A major problem in the mentoring program is that mentors may become overly protective and encase those they mentor into a "glass bubble" by shunting them into jobs with adequate pay and professional challenges, but eliminate all chance of further advancement.

76. List the steps provided in the text for establishing an effective mentoring program.
(p. 43-44)

Establishing an effective mentoring program typically involves several steps:

1. Top-management support is secured for the program.
2. Mentors and their protégés are carefully chosen. The mentor, who provides the advice and guidance, is paired with an individual who is very likely to profit from the experience.
3. An effective mentoring program would be to give both mentors and protégés an orientation. The mentors are taught how to conduct themselves, and the protégés are given guidance on the types of questions and issues that they should raise with their mentor so that they can gain the greatest value from the experience.
4. Throughout the mentoring period, mentor and protégé individually and together meet with the support staff of the program to see how well things are going.
5. At the end of the mentoring cycle, overall impressions and recommendations are solicited from both mentors and protégés regarding how the process can be improved in the future.

77. Identify the common alternative work schedules discussed in the text.

(p. 44)

The most common alternative work schedule arrangements include flextime, the compressed workweek, job sharing, and telecommuting.

Luthans - Chapter 02 #77

78. Describe the common alternative work schedules which allow employees flexibility in balancing their home and work demands. Provide examples if required.
(p. 44-45)

1. Flextime allows employees greater autonomy by permitting them to choose their daily starting and ending times within a given time period called a bandwidth. E.g. Two parents are both employed at a company that has a bandwidth of 7 A.M. to 7 P.M. Everyone working for the firm must put in his or her eight hours during this time period. The father may go to work at 7 A.M. and work until 3 P.M., at which time he leaves and picks up the children from school. The mother, meanwhile, drops the children at school at 8:45 A.M. and works from 9:30 A.M. to 5:30 P.M. Thus both parents are able to adjust their work and home schedules to fit within the bandwidth.

2. Compressed workweek compresses the workweek into fewer days. E.g. The typical workweek is 40 hours spread over five days, a compressed workweek could be four 10-hour days.

3. Job sharing is the splitting of a full-time position between two people, each of whom works part-time.

4. Telecommuting entails receiving and sending work between home and the office. E.g. Employees may come into the office on Monday and Tuesday, work out of their homes on Wednesday and Thursday via telecommuting, and come in again on Friday.

The examples provided by students for each alternative work schedule may vary.

79. Describe the various factors that determine ethical behavior.

(p. 46)

A number of relevant factors from the cultural, organizational, and external environment determine ethical behavior.

1. Cultural influences on ethical behavior come from family, friends, neighbors, education, religion, and the media.
2. Organizational influences come from ethical codes, role models, policies and practices, and reward and punishment systems.
3. The external forces having an impact on ethical behavior include political, legal, economic, and international developments.

These factors often work interdependently in shaping the ethical behavior of individuals and groups in organizations.
